

Curriculum Intent	History is 'brought to life' by the active engagement of children in historical enquiry through drama, visits, interviews and the use of a range of sources, including artefacts, for research. Children study the lives of people, past and present, and key events, in order to develop a sense of chronology and an understanding of where they have come from. Diverse experiences and contributions of communities and individuals from a range of backgrounds to British history, society and culture are considered; and a thoughtful, enquiring approach to interpreting the past is encouraged, so children become better informed citizens of the world, with a greater understanding of the value of inclusion, similarity and difference.
--------------------------	--

Key Concepts

- Sense of chronology: Using timelines to pin-point events and develop an understanding of how History has unfolded
- Sense of period: Recognising some of the defining features of a period
- Continuity and change: Considering ways in which life changed during the period being studied, with reasons why; comparing/contrasting to contemporary societies and the modern world
- Cause & consequence: Considering key events and their effect on everyday life
- Historical interpretation: Understanding that our knowledge of the past is constructed from a range of sources; selecting and organising relevant historical information; noting connections, contrasts and trends over time; developing the appropriate use of historical terms; asking questions about change, cause, similarity and difference and significance
- Significant individuals: Considering their impact; comparing/contrasting with their contemporaries and modern-day individuals
- Significant national events: Investigating what happened and why they had an impact

Local History: Why study Cromwell?

He was born and brought up in Huntingdon and he became the first commoner to become Head of State in British history. It is possible to visit his house in Ely and his school in Huntingdon – now The Cromwell Museum.

He divides opinions: partly because some people wanted to blacken his name after the Restoration, partly because some of his actions, such as his Irish campaign, were controversial. Some love him; others loathe him – either way he is impossible to ignore.

He was one of the key figures in the Civil War and formed the New Model Army, which enabled Parliament to defeat Charles I, who was put on trial and executed in 1649. This was the first time that a monarch had been deposed and put on trial by his own people. From now on, heads of state were answerable to the law and their people.

His Protectorate was the first government in British history to have a written constitution - a document that set out the rules for how the country should be governed and enshrined the principle of freedom of religion. For a time in the 1650s there was the greatest period of religious toleration

			there had yet been in England or would be again for over a century. Cromwell is often misunderstood. The popular image of him is as a dour, humourless individual, dressed in black. His portraits show him actually in fine clothes; he seems to have been a devoted husband and father, enjoyed music, dancing and horse racing and had a good sense of humour. This period led to the foundation of our modern parliamentary democracy. Significant Individual: Cromwell Significant National Events: Civil War 1642-49 British Values: Democracy, equality, tolerance of different faiths and beliefs, respect, individual liberty and the rule of law. Equality and inclusion: religious tolerance. Excursion: Cromwell Museum? Cultural capital: Knowledge of significant national events and significant individuals, with an excursion to enhance knowledge and understanding.
